H. Horner M.P. "CANADA AT THE CROSSROADS"

This is hardly a brilliant, and evocative or an unusual thought. People have been saying it ever since Canada existed. Canada is in the peculiar position of a nation which has spent the first 100 years at the cross-roads.

Some are not even sure that it is a nation.

Mr. Pearson has called it "A nation within a nation".

He has called one province "The homeland of a nation", without specifying what he thought the other provinces were.

In 1963, he called for a constitution made in 1963.

Presumably, today he wants a constitution made in 1966, and in 1967, will want one made in 1967.

He has continued the unpalatable national crisis of leading us parry down the hyphenated pathway of the "TWO NATIONS THEORY".

The Conservative Party at Confederation accepted the theory of two cultural nations, by arranging for constitutional recognition to the French language, at Ottawa, in the courts and in Quebec.

It has never, will never accord recognition to the theory of "Two Political Parties".

It is in this theory that the Liberal under Mr. Pearson are leading with the inevitability of a snow-slide into oblivion.

It is my observation that the majority of people in Quebec do not want two separate and distinct political nations.

But they do want recognition of Two Cultures.

As far as separatism is concerned, the danger must be over, otherwise, having tolerated it for three years, Mr. Lesage would not have attached it.

As far as Mr. P. Pearson goes, he never attached.

He accepted a committee to study its effects and the committee reported, huddled, that Canada was indeed, "one nation", economically, as well as politically.

This is what we have been trying to lay in our modest and reticent failure for several years now.

Mr. Diefenbaker issued a statement a couple of weeks ago, setting out the policy of our party in this regard. It is worth repeating.

"I believe that the roots of disunity lie largely in economic centralization and insecurity which is often emphasized, of racial differences.

The racial aspects are used to re-emphasize which must be removed by measures to assure all Canadians of equality of opportunity.

National development with equality of opportunity everywhere in our country is a key to national unity.

Within the boundaries of Canada we have human and natural resources unmatched by any other country in the world. We must tap these resources and in doing so, must ensure that Canadians everywhere reap the benefits.

What is Canada's destiny as a nation?

Are we to be absorbed into the United States politically, as well as culturally and economically?

"NO" has been the answer for 100 years and will continue to be.

There is not the future I envisage for Canada.

Are we to be absorbed into the United States politically, as well as culturally and economically?

"NO" has been the answer for 100 years and will continue to be.

There is not the future I envisage for Canada.

The statement by Mr. Diefenbaker is clear, precise and definite.

And yet it was largely ignored by the Liberal press.

They go on painting the Leader of the Conservative Party as negative and immovable and anti-Quebec.

This is catastrophic, not only as a diversion to our party.

This we can bear with.

It is a fundamental disservice to Canadians and the cause of unity, since it is a deliberate attempt to create the impression that there is no alternative to the middle and men of the Liberals.

This is no tragedy.

Nevertheless, in spite of the attempts in the Liberal press to ignore Diefenbaker's to dissent everything he says and does to destroy every position he takes, it is a comforting and almost unbelievable fact that what has been said for getting through to the people.

Faith and the Fragmented Life

In him all things hold together — Colossians 1:17.

By Rev. J. A. Davidson

SOME time ago I was amazed by a young mother stopping for a gift for her small son. A clerk in the store had shown her a curious looking toy that was merely a jumble of bits and pieces.

She asked him, "But isn't this a bit complicated for a small child?"

"It is an educational toy, madam," replied the clerk rather laughingly.

"Educational?" I asked. "Yes, madam," explained the clerk. "It is designed to help adjust the child to living in the world of today. Any way he puts it together is wrong."

Does not that little story point rather sharply to one of the fundamental problems of our life today? Life for most of us has become complicated. Life does present itself often to us as a jumble of bits and pieces. Conflicting demands and appeals have tended to make us a generation of fragmented personalities.

The clearest expression, "my shattered nerves", is altogether too appropriate nowadays. Most of us are so cluttered by the incessant stimulation and suggestion of the world that we find it almost impossible to fit together the bits and pieces of our lives into any kind of meaningful and satisfying pattern. We do find — do we not? — that no matter how we put these together, it is wrong.

We all feel the need for something firm and fixed around which we can sort out and organize our various bits and pieces. We all feel the need for a strong centre.

HORNER REPORT.

Through the fog of Liberal lies, propaganda, misstatements, many ad news interpretative reports as image is emerging of John Diefenbaker, a man who wants for something the people believe in.

Something that at this juncture of our affairs is essential to the survival in freedom and independence of our country.

This image is not restricted to the West.

Wave of uneasiness is sweeping across Canada, at the results of two years of Ottawa posturing, posturing, and petty politics.

Certainly, one of the most pronounced examples of this uneasiness is in Quebec, where thousands who want and are determined to be and remain Canadians under the impression that Pearson policies are cutting them off from the mainstream of Canadian economic and political life.

In all the turmoil, confusion and uncertainty, with Mr. Pearson being along like a child on the current of his own class, John Diefenbaker emerges as a rock-solid, confident in the assurance of his convictions—the convictions of those who made this country great.

He has dedicated his life to his country.

He sacrificed his life and power on the altar of unshakable conviction.

Canadians know this—and remember it.

The Liberals tried to bury him. But he would not lie down.

Newman tried it with a book. The book is dead.

Diefenbaker is very much alive.

They tried every possible way to remove and they will keep on trying—because his continued existence is a challenge to them to curb his power.

This design in power at the price of surrender.

Surrender to the very shape and structure of the nation.

Surrender to those who would control Canada from outside, while going through the motions of being solemn nationalists.

Surrender of sovereignty.

Surrender of conviction.

A noble order of shabby surrenders dominating heavily in the first and ultimate surrender of sovereignty, dignity and independence.

We face a great constitutional issue.

The issue of whether Canada will continue as a nation, sovereign and independent, or will end up as a series of petty states jostling for supreme power.

The present Government has sponsored constitutional changes having the effect of reducing Parliament to a rubber stamp, in constitutional matters and throwing the power into the political arena for the province to control over, the dog over a bone.

In the Pearson camp this passed for constitutionalism.

Before agreeing to an amendment formula which weakens Parliament, we want to know what amendments are being sought.

We are celebrating this year the 70th anniversary of Parliament.

Whatever its examples may say, it is an institution that has endured.

It is ironic that in this year of celebration, Parliament should be suffering from the attempts of the present Government to curb its power.

We have had the application of built-in clauses through measures permitting the Government to decide how much time it is to be spent on each day of every debate.

People say Parliament wastes time.

The Liberals grow very impatient with Parliament.

They feel it wastes in their way.

But friends in the grand waste articles saying Parliament fails in its purpose.

Parliament does not criticize when legislation is brought in poorly-prepared, ill-considered, and often very much the better for amendment and revision.

The motion Plan was brought in three times.

The first time it was not satisfactory to the province.

The second time it was changed to match the Quebec plan.

The third time it passed.

Could you blame Parliament for this?

We were criticised for the dragging out the flag debate.

Thirteen days were spent debating the three-leaf version which the Prime Minister said was the Government's choice.

We forced the flag committee.

When it was formed, an additional 10 days was spent debating the three-leaf version, without a single member of the Cabinet revealing the stand of the Government.

On the tenth day the Prime Minister opened the debate and announced that the government will take part.

Government accepted three-leaf version. The same day he moved closure.

There was a barrage of criticism against the Conservative Party and against Parliament for going on too long.

Not to long ago, President Johnson appeared in television and in the course of a broadcast announced that civil rights legislation in the United States had taken eight months to go through Congress.

Nobody down there complains about the time taken by that legislation.

The changes in the rules will greatly affect Parliament's ability to deal with the question of constitutional change—and don't think the Liberal Government did not have that in mind in bringing in the new measures.

One thing is clear.

Changes in Canada's constitution, producing an amendment formula granting new and almost unrestricted powers to the provinces—with the exception of the veto which they will have mutually—and removing powers from Parliament, cannot be accepted without full debate.

These changes, if accepted, will alter the shape of Canada as we know it.

The authority granting power for amendments to be made in Canada will be in the form of yet another statute of the Parliament of the United Kingdom—yet that the ultimate power over the constitution will still reside outside of Canada.

This is not good, enough.

What we must have is a Constitution which will be a statute of Parliament and to which amendments can be made following agreement at a constitutional conference where both the federal and provincial governments will take part.

Swimming News

SWIMMING ATTENDANCE IMPROVED

Attendance at the Drayton Valley swimming pool has increased considerably during the past two weeks. As of July 15, the halfway mark of the season, a total of 13,500 swimmers had taken part in the local aquatic program. This total means a daily average of 147 swimmers during the first half of the season. Possibly this does not seem like too high an average, however, it is at least 100 below any previous season average at this time. Of the total swimmers at the pool to date this year 50% have been children under twelve years of age, 25% have been students, and 10% have been adults. These percentages compare favourably with those of previous seasons.

The first phase of swimming instruction was completed last week. The results were quite gratifying as 78% of the candidates passed the required examinations and received Red Cross awards. The second phase of instruction program will be completed by the end of July. There will be plenty of openings for candidates at every level in the third and fourth phases of the program which will be run in August. You are asked to register for these classes at your earliest possible convenience.

The Royal Life Saving Society association will take place from Aug. 1 through August 14 under the direction of Ken Milroy. This training will be offered at three levels, Elementary, Intermediate and Advanced.

Further information about this course may be obtained at the Pool office at any time that the pool is open.
